

Publishing the 27th issue of Tasamuh Periodical

The Ramallah Center for Human Rights Studies published the 27th issue of Tasamuh journal in January 2010. This periodical is dedicated to discussing tolerance and human rights issues.

This issue included studies and articles that focused on the partisan work in Palestine. They discussed the nature of the partisan work, the complication of the Palestinian political system, and the problematic relationships between the axes of this system. This is discussed in relation to the progress of the work of these political parties and their movements after the Oslo accords. It also highlighted the specific repercussions that produced after the accords were signed. Finally, the studies discussed the crisis of the Palestinian movements and parties.

The reports section included report on; the situation of the Palestinian refugees in Nahr el-bared refugee camp in Lebanon, the Goldstone Report, and the Palestinian National Authority and human rights.

In the cultural section, an essay discussed tolerance in the ideology of Jubran Khalil Jubran. The Final section, the laws and legislations, an article discussed the copy rights in current Palestinian Legislations and international accords.
